

Abstract

The results of investigation of activation method of water-cement mixtures by creating artificial cavitation in the grouting mortars volume by gas-generating agents are given. The influences of reochemical activation on the cement stone exponent are also studied.